

THE ATLANTA WAY: PAST, PRESENT, & FUTURE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6TH

Welcome to the third Atlanta Studies Symposium!

Atlantans often say we live in one of the most forward looking metropolitan areas in the world. We pride ourselves on having anticipated the importance of air travel, of joining together across racial lines to lead the South in desegregation, of hosting the world stage that was the 1996 Olympics. Then we turn around and decry our traffic congestion, outlandish carbon footprint, broken water supply system, failing primary and secondary schools, and fragmented governance.

We may just be the prototypical metropolis of the 21st Century. While Manuel Castells and Saskia Sassen come closer to describing 2015 Atlanta than Walter Christaller, we are woefully short of theory that truly explains the way Atlanta and other 21st Century urban agglomerations grow and function. By virtue of proximity, those of us who research and teach in the capital of this post-industrial mega-region have opportunity to help develop the new urban theory and in the process to help solve the most pressing problems of our age.

The twenty higher education institutions in the Atlanta metro are home to the seventh largest concentration of college students and the fourth largest concentration of research spending in the U.S. Much of that brain power is focused on the issues of our home region, but is scattered across many disciplines and institutions. The Atlanta Studies Symposium is a rare opportunity to bring scholars together to compare findings about our region across fields and universities. Atlanta can only benefit. As scientists, hopefully we will form new partnerships and be in a better position to lead our disciplines.

This third edition of the Symposium is the largest to date, with 80+ presenters from twelve universities and a host of other public, private and non-profit organizations from eight states. We are indebted to a creative and hard-working organizing committee and to eight departments in the four sponsoring institutions: the Atlanta Fed, Emory, Georgia State and Georgia Tech

Enjoy the day and continue to build a better Atlanta!

Bruce Stiftel, Professor and Chair Georgia Tech School of City and Regional Planning
